There is no getting around it. We make and have for wholesale and retail, the best candles to be had in Akron.

Our candles have the style that bears the stamp of purity on each piece. Have a look next time you are in Akron.

S. B. LAFFERTY.

Some alarm is expressed by certain Paris epicures because the supply of snails of the finest quality seems to be falling off to a serious extent. This apprehension, however, will cause no distress upon an extended scale, as the taste for the delicate creature that carries his house upon his back has not been worldwide. In fact, it has never gained much ground outside of the Latin race, and beyond the borders of France itself the number of gourmets who have extolled the snail as a table delicacy of the most desirable sort has not made a long list. But snails are clean feeders. Why should there be anywhere a prejudice against them among the eaters of lobsters and crabs, or of the bulging legs of goggle-eyed bullfrogs?

WOMEN OF HUMBLE ORIGIN HAVE RISEN TO NOBLE RANK.

London, Dec. 2.—Many of the princesses who will figure at the coronation earned their own living before becoming invested through marriage with coronets and titles, and these commanded admiration and sympathy for having as young girls, tried to relieve their parents of the burden of their maintenance by working as useful members of the community.

Prominent among them is the Duchess of Somerset, who, owing to the Duke of Norfolk being a widower, will appear in Westminster Abbey at the coronation as the premier peeress of the realm, and entitled to precedence over all other English women who do not happen to be princesses of the royal blood. She is a tall, stately and handsome woman, who in her younger days was very beautiful. Her husband made her acquaintance in Canada, where he served with his regiment. She was a governess when he fell in love with her and married her, in the face of no end of opposition.

His uncle was so exasperated by the marriage that he left every vestige of property of which he could dispose to his other nephew, Lord Percy St. Maur, so that the present

Lady Dudley, Ex-Shop Girl, and Her Children; Duchess of Somerset, Who Was a Governess.

Duke and Duchess are far from being well off. The maiden name of the Duchess was Susan MacKinnon.

Another popular peeress who earned her own living is the beautiful young Countess of Dudley, who was a Miss Rachel Gurney. Her father, who was a member of the celebrated banking firm of Gurney Brothers, came to grief in a rather sensational manner. The circumstances were such as to lead Mrs. Gurney and her daughters to leave him. Mrs. Gurney opened a millinery store in London, while her two daughters took places as sales-girls in a fashionable milliner's shop in Regent street.

Rachel Gurney was a shop girl when she won the heart and the hand of the Earl of Dudley, who is to succeed Lord Cadogan as Viceroy of Ireland. Her younger sister became the wife of a wealthy baronet named Trowbridge.

The Marchioness of Ailsa was likewise a shop girl, her birth and parentage being most humble. She took to hospital nursing, went out to India, and on the way home made the acquaintance of Lord Ailsa, who was traveling under an assumed name and it was not until she had promised to become his wife that she learned of his rank. Her maiden name was Isabella McMaster, and her home is now the ancestral castle of the Marquis of Ailsa, Culzean Castle, pronounced as "Culain."

In spite of her obscure origin she is immensely popular, not only throughout Scotland, but likewise in London society. Her husband is the head of the Scotch house of Kennedy, and has many American affiliations, one of his ancestors in the last century having been Collector of the Port of New York before succeeding to the peerage.

Lady Lyveden, widow of Lord Lyveden, whom she married when he was in his seventy-second year, was working in a stationary shop at Hastings, when she won the heart and the coronet of the head of the house of Vernon. The present Lord Lyveden was a steward on a trans-Atlantic steamer and a waiter in a New York Bowery restaurant before succeeding to his cousin's honors.

ARISTOCRATIC CRESCUS.

The King of the Turf Conscious of His Superiority.

The horse Crescus may not know that his owner refused to take $125,000 for him a few days ago, says the Kansas City Star, but the fastest trotter in the world has aristocratic instincts that almost lead one to believe he realizes the importance of his position.

This remarkable animal pays no attention whatever to his admirers, is proof against the advances of strangers and actually rejects all attempts that are made to pay him marked notice. He does not like to be petted and deliberately turns around and walks to the other side of his stall whenever a hand is reached out to stroke him.

Crescus is comfortably housed in the large stable of the Kansas City Driving club on Brush creek. His stall is as large as a big bedroom and is thickly carpeted with straw and hung on all sides with fine blankets that have been given to his owner. One of these, a fancy one in black and gold, came from the store of John Wana-maker, and another made of pure undyed wool was presented to his owner in Hoboken, N. J. Each of these blankets is large enough to completely cover the horse. They represent the trotter's wardrobe. He seldom gets a change of costume, however, for the favorite blanket is an old white one that saw service before Crescus went into the regular business of breaking world's records.

Crescus eats the food that other horses do, but he has his own way of about his meals except in the quantity of oats he is permitted to devour. He is given nine quarts a day, the allowance being divided into three meals of equal parts. The hay that Crescus munches all day long comes from California. He has eaten his way through a large bundle of it in two places in order that he might get at the oats which had settled at the bottom. Crescus can drink all the water he wants. Plenty of it is kept in his stall, and instead of drinking a bucket or filling himself from a trough this horse takes a couple of swallows every half hour.

"We try to humor him as much as we can," said Ed Mitchell, who has taken care of Crescus, fed him and rubbed him down ever since the trotter was a colt. "He is just like a child, and when he can't have his own way he gets mad, and so we try to please him."

"Crescus seems to know he is a world-beater, doesn't he?" Mitchell was asked.

"Yes; he kind o' thinks he's the goods," was the reply.

A green rug tells of a lawyer who was about to furnish a bill of costs. "I hope," said his client, who was a bit of a "tough," that you will make it as light as possible."

"Ah," said the lawyer, "you might perhaps see that to the foreman of your establishment, but that is not the way I make my bread."

FLAGS AT HALF-MAST.

The Anniversary of a Day of General Mourning in Akron.

Flags at half mast, stores were closed, the courts adjourned and business generally was suspended in Akron 42 years ago today, Monday. The church bells tolled and over all the town there fell a hush as falls upon a household when death has entered. In the evening a great memorial mass meeting was held in Empire hall.

John Brown was dead—hanged at 11:15 o'clock of that day at Charles-town, Va., for the unsuccessful effort he made to seize and hold the government arsenal and other buildings at Harper's Ferry, by which act his name has been forever linked with that of that town. It was as a mark of sympathy and respect for John Brown and the cause he advocated that business was suspended and the memorial meeting held. Many condemned Brown's scheme and many conscientiously believed him to be insane, but yet they honored the former resident of this city whose honesty in his own motive they never questioned.

Judge N. D. Tibbals was one of those who spoke at the memorial meeting, and is probably the only one still living who had that distinction. Historian S. A. Lane was among those present and read a poem suitable to the occasion written by James Matthews.

IN THE CAR KITCHEN

SNUG MANNER IN WHICH EATABLES ARE STOWED AWAY.

Methods by Which Stores Are Replenished Which Give Out En Route—The Room for the Waiters, The Cooks and Their Work.

The actual standing room in the car kitchen consists of an aisle only wide enough for two men to pass each other and about fifteen feet long. On one side is an unbroken row of ranges, the very best sort invented, for when men do women's work they are not content with makeshift tools. On the other side is a steam table for keeping things hot, other tables and some of the refrigerators, for there are many. Hot water and cold is held in cylinders which lie along the ceiling and look like the projectiles used on torpedo boats.

One refrigerator is devoted exclusively to fish, which lie shining on blocks of clear ice as tempting as in any fish market. Until I had actually seen this refrigerator it had been my practice to refuse fish in traveling, feeling there was some mystery about its preservation, but now—indeed, no such thing. I had fancied the whole menu cooked at once in enormous quantities, like a soldier's mess at camp, and my fastidious car appetite had recoiled and faded away during the first course, but now I eat with relish, knowing the condition of the source of supply.

Another refrigerator is entirely for meats and game, another for fruit, and even bread and cake are kept in a refrigerator that they retain their moisture. Outside the kitchen there is a sacred toolbox under lock and key, and no man may put his hand therein except the steward or housekeeper of the dining car. There twenty-five kinds of wine are kept, and there will be shown to you, with a manner and pride, the royal family of champagne with cool, gold crowned heads resting on an icy throne.

But, to go back to the kitchen, that apartment is occupied by three men all in white, with perhaps a blue collar for tradition's sake, who serve deftly and capably the hither of waiters that swarm at the open square at the inner end of the room. It is a wise provision that prevents close contacts, for cooks are apt to be "radio" at the crucial hour of dinner serving and, besides, the car kitchen can contain no more men than the three cooks who broil, roast, stew and fry the numberless fancies of the patrons' palates. These men work hard. The head cook, whose salary is about $70 per month, stands farthest from the

THE GOSPEL.

According to medicine, we seek the truth wherever it is found, on Christian or on heathen ground. We are not ashamed to confess that St. Bernard's Vegetable Pills are not our, or indeed, any modern discovery. Their formula was known, even their use became popularized, by the monks of St. Bernard, and named by them in honor of their venerable patron saint. The most important fact about them is that as an aperient, blood purifier, liver and kidney tonic, nothing equals them.

THE DUKE'S JOKE HAS NEVER BEEN FORGOTTEN.

GRAND DUCHESS OF HESS.

Berlin, Nov. 30.—The Grand Duchess of Hesse, grand-daughter of Queen Victoria, has refused to return to her husband, the Grand Duke, and it said their long continued marital infelicities will soon result in her applying for a divorce.

Strenuous efforts are being made by friends to suppress the scandal.

The first clash between the Duke and Duchess was caused by a prank. At a ball at Darmstadt, Hesse, with other men caused the lights to be extinguished suddenly. He and others armed with swords and guns, deluged the ladies with water and in the dark kissed them indiscriminately.
